get this next draft done that I'm really excited about. And, from there, I'll probably be pitching it around and submitting it to competitions."

Conrad plans to keep Dr. Kate Museum staff and people of Woodruff updated on the film's progress, he said.

One last thing Conrad said about the story of Dr. Kate and the Million Penny Parade is that he wants people to understand how special this story really is.

"Everyone I've spoken to in the city about it, everyone is just amazed by this story," he said. "And they're inspired by this story. I just think it's really important for the story to continue, and I want the people of Woodruff to be proud of this story and their legacy because I think it's something really special."
