Stay home if you're sick with RSV

Local health official offers information on the virus

MENOMINEE—Before attending Thanksgiving festivities with a cold, it might be wise to determine whether to go based on who's going—that slight cough could be Respiratory Syncytial Virus (RSV), according to a local health expert.

"If you are really sick and especially if you're going to be around elderly relatives and little relatives, maybe you should stay home—certainly if you're feverish," said Jennie Miller, immunization and communicable disease coordinator for Public Health Delta Menominee Counties.

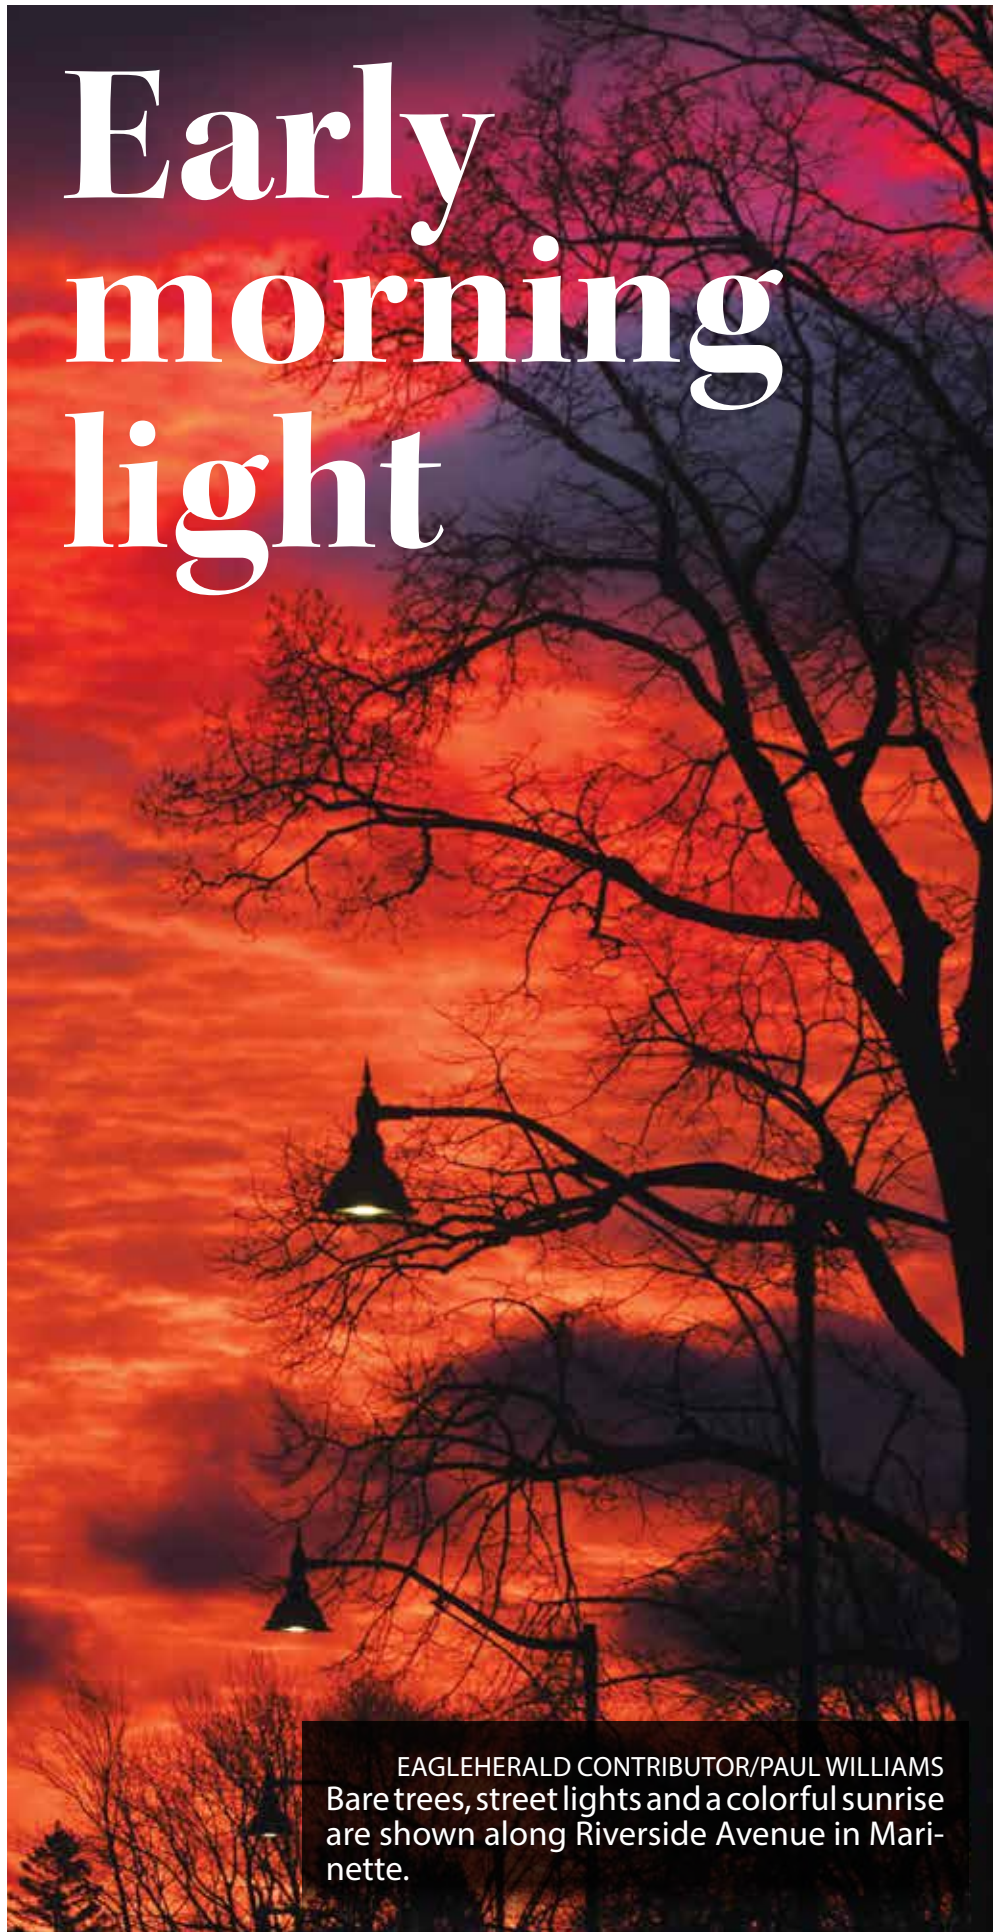

RSV is a major cause of respiratory illness in all age groups, but according to the Wisconsin Department of Health Services, the complications can be severe with infants, young children, older adults and people with underlying medical conditions. For kids under 2 years old, RSV is the most common cause of pneumonia, bronchitis, croup and ear infections, Miller said. It can show up as a runny nose, cough, sore throat, fever, decrease in appetite or wheezing.

"With the holidays coming up and more and more travel, we might see more RSV and flu coming our way."

Jennie Miller,
local health official
